

Utah State University's National Center For Hearing Assessment & Management Early Childhood Hearing Outreach (ECHO) Initiative

Serving as the National Resource Center on Early Hearing Detection and Intervention for Early Head Start programs, the ECHO Initiative has also been reaching out to many other early childhood education and health care providers who can potentially integrate hearing screening into their practices.

Any professional who is attentive to the importance of language development should be equally conscientious about monitoring children's hearing throughout the early language-learning years. Early childhood care providers can successfully be trained to deliver high-quality, evidence-based hearing screening in a variety of settings and the ECHO Initiative is here to help.
