Preface
This information was compiled from a statewide survey of licensed audiologists in February 2012 to serve as a resource for families, medical home providers, and newborn hearing screening programs.
Information contained in this document is from “self report”. Individual agency billing policies apply to all services.
Hearing screening is quick and painless!

OTOACOUSTIC EMISSIONS:

OAE, DPOAE, TEOAE

Soft sounds are directed into the ear through a tiny earphone. A computer then measures the responses. The OAE measures sound waves (emissions) generated by the motion of the outer hair cells in the cochlea (inner ear). A strong “emission” means the inner ear is functioning normally.

AUDITORY BRAINSTEM RESPONSE:

ABR, ASSR, BAER, BSER

Small earphones are placed in your baby’s ears and electrodes are placed on your baby’s head with tape. Soft clicking sounds are directed into the ear while a computer measures your baby’s response to sound. This test evaluates the ear, the auditory nerve, and the brainstem’s response to sound. This test can only be done if the child is either asleep or very still. It often requires sedation.

UTAH’S NEWBORN HEARING SCREENING RULE & LAW

http://le.utah.gov/~code/TITLE26/htm/26_10_000600.htm

Hearing loss is a reportable condition, required by law.
THE 1-3-6 PROGRAM

1 - Before One Month of Age: Hearing Screening. All infants should be screened before 1 month of age, ideally before they leave the birth hospital. Without universal newborn hearing screening, hearing loss is usually found when a child is 2 to 3 years of age.

3 - Before Three Months of Age: Hearing Evaluation. All infants who do not pass the hearing screening should have a diagnostic audiological (hearing) evaluation before 3 months of age, or as soon as they can. Infants who have hearing loss should have a complete medical evaluation.

6 - Before Six Months of Age: Early Intervention. All infants with hearing loss should receive early intervention services before 6 months of age (medical, audiological, educational and support services).

PEDIATRIC TESTS OF HEARING

VISUAL REINFORCEMENT AUDIOMETRY:

VRA

These audiological (hearing) tests use the child’s ability to localize (or search for) sounds to provide information about hearing sensitivity. By 6 months of age, an infant should be able to look for the source of a sound if he hears it.

TYMPANOMETRY:

A soft earphone is placed in the ear canal. The movement of the eardrum and the pressure in the middle ear space is recorded. This test determines if there is fluid in the middle ear and if the middle ear bones are working properly.

PLAY AUDIOMETRY

Using headphones, a child is conditioned to respond to a sound they hear by performing a repetitive task, such as placing a peg in a pegboard or raising their hand, each time he hears a sound.
