“Given accurate, objective information about hearing loss, parents can make sound decisions for their child...”

Childhood Hearing Loss

Significant hearing loss occurs in 1 to 3 per 1000 live births. Additionally, 2 to 4 per 1000 children will develop hearing loss during childhood.

An estimated 120 to 360 children in North Carolina are identified each year with hearing loss that can have a significant effect on their speech and language development. More than 90% of children with hearing loss are born to parents who have normal hearing and minimal understanding of the effects of hearing loss. The challenges of childhood hearing loss must be recognized and addressed as quickly as possible.

The state of North Carolina has adopted the 1-3-6 objectives as suggested by the Joint Committee on Infant Hearing: Hearing loss screening by 1-month, diagnosis by 3-months, amplification (when appropriate) and early intervention in place by 6-months.

If appropriate intervention begins by the time an infant is 6-months-old, language development can be normal, regardless of the severity of the hearing loss.

(Yoshinago-Itano, 1999, 2000, 2002)

Additionally, multiple studies indicate that nationally, fewer than one-tenth of children with hearing loss receive services to which they are entitled through early intervention or in the public schools.

(English, 1995; AG Bell Assoc. 2004)

It is imperative that parents understand the challenges of hearing loss, avenues for assistance, and the many pathways to a happy and successful adulthood. BEGINNINGS' staff members work daily to provide families with the accurate and objective information they need to make the very best decisions for their child during infancy, toddler/preschool years, elementary school, adolescence, and beyond.
